Forau: MSG is relevant

THE Melanesian Spearhead Group, of which Papua New Guinea is a member, is relevant and will remain so for the sake of its members, says Peter Forau.

Forau, the director-general of the MSG secretariat, emphasized this point in his summary at the end of one-day leaders' totok session in Port Vila on Saturday. His response was based on some suggestions that the MSG had lost its way in responding to the needs of its members. "We have not lost our way. However, we appreciate the value constructive criticism to remind us how to better define our way forward," Forau said.

Speaking on the session "Building a Strong and United Melanesia, Solomon Islands Foreign Affairs Minister Clay Forau put forward a proposal for a Melanesian psyche to bring all Melanesians together as a family. "This is the feeling of being united together as a family'' he said. That feeling is lost if people have no connection to the work of the MSG, Forau said.

The MSG must respond to the needs of all the member countries. If it doesn't meet their needs then it becomes irrelevant. We can only be strong if the results are being translated into something tangible that people can enjoy – the benefits.

He assured Melanesian leaders that the struggles of the Kanaky people would remain an important priority of that new vision for the MSG. "The Kanaks need the help of the achieving independence. It is now within their grasp and the MSG needs to be there with them to fulfil that dream" The Port Vila secretariat, established in 2008, serves the five member countries of the MSG, which has a total population of eight million.
